RE: Pyraclostrobin Comment
DATE: August 25, 2014

The following comment is provided by the Western Integrated Pest Management Center in response to EPA docket number EPA-HQ-OPP-2014-0051. The response includes information regarding pyraclostrobin use in California, Oregon, and Washington.

Pyraclostrobin is an important fungicide for controlling fungal diseases in many high-value specialty crops. Examples include blossom blight, brown rot, rust, scab, and shothole on almonds; powdery mildew and grey mold on caneberries; Alternaria leaf blight and powdery mildew on carrots; Alternaria leafspot on crucifers; eastern filbert blight on filberts (hazelnuts); powdery mildew and grey mold on grapes, powdery mildew and anthracnose on lettuce and leafy greens, except spinach; many diseases in ornamental and nursery plant production; Alternaria leaf blight and Botryosphaeria panicle and shoot blight of pistachios; black mold and powdery mildew of tomatoes and peppers; blossom blight, brown rot and powdery mildew of soft stone fruits (apricots, cherries, peaches, plums, nectarines); grey mold and powdery mildew of strawberry; and several diseases on turfgrass. A separate comment from Al Fournier will include information on pyraclostrobin use for Alternaria leafblight of cotton in the southern desert region of California.

Pyraclostrobin is used either alone (Cabrio, Headline, Insignia) or pre-mixed with boscalid (Pristine, Pageant) depending on whether the boscalid component is also effective against the disease(s) targeted in the specific crop. For instance, pyraclostrobin solo products are used in crucifers, filberts, lettuce and leafy greens (not spinach), and tomatoes; whereas pyraclostrobin plus boscalid products are used in almonds, grapes, pistachios, and soft stone fruits.

In almond and soft stone fruit production in California, pyraclostrobin plus boscalid is a very important component of the integrated management of several diseases. The pre-mixed product helps with resistance management when used as a component of a fungicide rotation program. Pyraclostrobin plus boscalid is typically applied in rain is forecast during bloom time for control of blossom blight (Monilinia laxa and M. fructicola) and during spring leaf wetness periods for control of shothole of almond. Later in the season, applications may be made if scouting indicates brown rot, rust, or scab issues.

In blueberries in the Pacific Northwest, pyraclostrobin plus boscalid is used towards the end of bloom for control of anthracnose and Alternaria fruit rots. The combination product helps control Botrytis when applied to blooms. Pyraclostrobin only products may be used once or twice more after bloom before harvest.

In caneberries in the Pacific Northwest, pyraclostrobin or pyraclostrobin plus boscalid are used during floricanes bloom but to protect the primocanes from Septoria leafspot. Primocanes are the first year's cane growth but do not produce fruit. Floricanes are the second year's cane growth and will flower and then produce fruit. At the end of the season, floricanes are pruned out, leaving this year's primocanes to become next year's floricanes.

Pyraclostrobin is very important in lettuce and leafy greens production in California for control of powdery mildew and anthracnose. Powdery mildew seems to be increasing in importance in recent years possibly due to increasing temperatures. Pyraclostrobin is the preferred fungicide in FRAC #11 because azoxystrobin cannot be tank mixed with other commonly used materials and therefore requires an extra spray equipment pass through the field. The 0 day PHI is helpful to growers near harvest and provides scheduling flexibility. Pyraclostrobin is rarely used on spinach due to concerns with phytotoxicity.

Pyraclostrobin is very important in the disease management program in carrot production in California. Pyraclostrobin is effective for control of powdery mildew and Alternaria leaf blight and is used in rotation with FRAC #2 and FRAC #7 materials. Pyraclostrobin plus boscalid is used when cottony soft rot (Sclerotinia sclerotiorum) is also a problem.

In Oregon, pyraclostrobin is important for control of eastern filbert blight. It is used in rotation with FRAC #3 and FRAC #11 products to prevent fungicide resistance. The combination product is not used because boscalid is not effective against eastern filbert blight.

In California, Oregon and Washington state vineyards, pyraclostrobin plus boscalid remains one of the top fungicides in wine grape grower's tool kits. Due to its dual activity against powdery mildew and Botrytis bunch rot, the combination product has become a key component for IPM, particularly during the bloom period in vineyards. Growers maximize their dual control efforts during the bloom to bunch closure time period by specifically selecting dual-use fungicides for powdery mildew and Botrytis bunch rot control, or tank-mixing products to achieve this same goal. Specifically using pre-mixed material has allowed growers to optimize control by reducing vineyard passes and potential loss of product efficacy than can happen with some tank mixes. Being a combination product helps to avert the onset of fungicide resistance in both pathogens and helps manage resistance in cases where it already occurs. Growers also like pyraclostrobin as it tends to be non-toxic to beneficial insects.

In pistachios in California, pyraclostrobin plus boscalid is very effective for control of Botryosphaeria panicle and shoot blight and Alternaria leaf blight. For panicle and shoot blight control, an integrated program of infected shoot pruning during the dormancy, fungicide applications in the spring during panicle growth, and irrigation management are used. For Alternaria leaf blight control, an integrated program of orchard sanitation, irrigation management, and fungicide application from August to mid-September are used.

In strawberries in the Pacific Northwest, pyraclostrobin is used during bloom for control of anthracnose that can express itself on the ripe fruit. It may also be used for powdery mildew control later in the growing season. In California, pyraclostrobin (most often with boscalid) is used for control of grey mold on the fruit and powdery mildew.

In processing tomato production in California, pyraclostrobin is applied four to eight weeks before harvest for control of powdery mildew. The disease has increased in importance in California since the early 2000s and is no longer well controlled with sulfur applications. Controlling powdery mildew is important to maintain the leaf canopy which protects the fruit from sunburn. Sunburned fruit are downgraded at the processing plant and sunburns are an entry point for other fungal fruit rots.

California pesticide use report data for 2012 is in the attached table, which contains records of 36,159 applications of pyraclostrobin.

I hope this helps. Please contact me if you need further information.

Sincerely,
